Desiderata of a Dragon

- When you are treated unjustly and become slandered and buried in lies, retain honesty, preserve dignity and distance, devote yourself to Gods and spirits.
- When enemies scheme against you, learn all their tricks throughout years in order to subvert them, when they destroy the other.
- When you lose your own family, wife and kids, learn paternal and maternal attitude towards the children and families of others.
- When brutes and simpletons try to vulgarize your mind and heart, retain scholarly, critical attitude, and remember the meaning of great honest forces and feelings,
- When you no longer feel fear, anxiety, arousal, and you retain composure during physical assaults and mental combat, remember about those who are still sensitive and broken, damaged and downcast,
- When you are destroyed and assaulted, and you are helpless against that, use it to train resilience, patience, and preserve a better stance in order to derive the better perspectives.
- When you meet ingratitude, contempt of the swine, leave them to their own devices, when they come back to you, treat them with reserve and patience, if they don't, you lose nothing of yourself, and let them unleash their foolishness against their old age of reflection.
- When you have spare time, put it to good use, train yourself in useful arts, sciences, and crafts, to participate in the labor of teachers, and the arts of philosophy and magic
- When you are reminded about death, put your efforts into training of splendid things worthy of Gods and make yourself worthy of being immortalized in spirit.
- When you are enslaved, always find a notion of freedom through the cracking walls of your prison, this is where your focus point is, expand it thoroughly.
- When you meet kings and emperors, treat them as you would treat a beggar that is dependent on you, on the wheel's of fortunes they are alike, the good kings and emperors took care of their people like fathers and mothers, by kingly and treat them like your mothers and fathers, just like the beggar.
- When you are disposed to great natures and deeds, let it mature first, parallel growth is required, simultaneously engage in all worthy things, fight your wars and battles of gigantomachy as the years pass by, you won't emerge unscathed, but of a noble character and wiser.
- When wretched things befall you, guide yourself at every second of their activity, if you fall to them, you will become wretched, if you don't, judge and decide what is better that will shape you and derive methods to combat the things wretched.
- When the world is upside down, and the wretched are praised in the upper society and noble are scorned everywhere, embody things you would like to see in the upper echelons of power, instead of falling prey to the ignoble rulers, that is kings-worthy.
- When strong and mature within, be soft and approachable without.
- In the end, reserved kindness always wins strangers and people, no matter how brutish and vulgar they are, amongst thieves simulate a greater thief, amongst murderers, a greater murderer, amongst cruel, be more cruel and ruthless, amongst the weak and subtle, be weaker and subtler, amongst the wise, wiser, if you may, that is a mark of great character and nature.
- There is thousand lives and adventures in one life, expand experience and coin it into a silent ethos, speak only when necessary, adapt rhetorics and persuasion to the audience, be a chameleo, but be steady in virtuous and high things, transparent and honest with a few people and Gods, the rest of society hates things that they are not by nature, hence you need to be strong to be integral, and adaptable to survive.
- If you can't combat hells, win them over with things they lack, friendship with Gods is secured by aspiring to excellent things, and keeping this honest aspiration towards the stars throughout manifold years of life.
- If you can't win a frontal war, engage in a war of subversion, while gathering silently armies of the dead, cohorts of hell, and squadrons of wings in Stars in heaven, strike only when the decisive tipping point grants you Alke, immortal armor, and the sword of Dike is on your side, otherwise bide your time.

..and all my scales worn damaged and peel off, Akkadian kings lions-headed, serpent-tongued, alike to Muśkuśśu of Marduk, shepherds for Igigi-Gods should be like kings, otherwise they are not worthy of the names of the sun-born sons of Nephilim.